Character.

There was intelligence in Woodsow Wilson's request for a Carnegie penslop, but was there character? There was political intelligence in his repudiation of the friends who helped make him Governor and President. but how much character?

There was intelligent perception in President Wilson's reluctant dealings with Germany. He perceived that he must do something, but was there character in what he did? Was there backbone? Did he mean what he said? Did Germany think so?

There was intelligence in President Wilson's flop on Panama tolls, on child labor, on preparedness. But was there in any of those belated turns to the right a trace of upstanding character?

There was intelligence—the intelligence of fear-in Mr. Wilson's dealings with Mexico. Was there character in them?

To mean what you say, to do what you say, is to show character. Who will assert, on Woodrow Wilson's record, that he has it?

Hughes and a National Budget.

As Mr. Hughes says, the deciarstion that if he is elected "we are going to have a businesslike administration of our Government under a sound budget system" is not a thing that sends any thrills along the spinel Nevertheless no prospect could give more solid satisfaction to the millions of taxpayers who will go

Here is something that Mr. Wilson might have done, had he cared to. No President ever had so complete t control of Congress as he did in the first two years of his Administration He forced through the Underwood tariff in double quick time and followed it, at the same session, with the Federal Reserve bank system. Had he committed himself to a budget system we should have one to-day, and either the Democrats in the last Congress would have been less wasteful or we should at least know now where the public money went.

in his Administration. To have senew and unbeard of taxes. Wanton extravagance and raids on the Civil Service were the price puld by Mr Wilson to get Congress to do his bidding in other things.

One Sure Enough Menace.

This comes in piercing faisetto from the vocal organs of the World:

of the consummation. It will be interesting to see whether the Navy Department attempts to yards. If it elected to do so there would then be a test of the comparative resources and methods of the Government and the private plants. During the last session of Congress there was a good deal of talk about the ability of the Navy Department to save money by building its own warships from keel to truck, but it can't be done in these times.

A Lesson in a Lie.

The Democratic National Committee began in the newspapers of Monday morning the publication of A series of assaults on CHARLES EVANS HUGHES which it was confidently predicted would erase that gentle man from the political map. The project was abandoned after three justalments of what had been advertised as a tremendous exposure had been disclosed to the public.

In none of these was the original promise of the committee kept; in not one of them was the good sense. good judgment, good reputation or good Americanism of CHARLES EVANS HUGHES injured or impaired in the slightest degree.

In each of them, on the other hand, the malice, the untruthfulness and the desperation of the Democratic National Committee were remorselessly exposed, and the incompetence of its authors was displayed in a manner that, had their purpose been respect able, must have inspired pity.

Moreover, the attempt to erect this pretentious edifice of falsehood resulted in the discovery of the chairman of the Democratic National Committee in a persistent, but vain, suit for the attention of the individual for receiving whom in the ordinary course of his candidacy Mr. HUGHES was assailed; and the circumstances of this discovery were such that VANCE Mc-CORMICE, if he possesses the sensibilities of ordinary men, cannot recall them without a high degree of discomfort. Thus one campaign roorback, care fully prepared and put in circulation. as collapsed, leaving those who hoped to profit from it helpless and impotent, stripped bare of all pretence of sincerity, and the man who was to have been its victim strengthened by the act of his unscrupulous enemies,

Is it permissible to hope that from this incident the managers of Woonnow Wilson's campaign for reelection may draw the conclusion that, even though they may not value truth for its own sake, the avoidance of lies in politics is the better policy?

Children Under Sixteen.

One of the lessons of the recent epidemic of infantile paralysis is that certain meddlesome features of quarintine adopted last summer are without any foundation of clinical worth. Some of these have not been positively demonstrated at the present time. They await the result of investigations which are now being made by reliable scientific authorities.

The wholesale exclusion of all children under sixteen years of age appears to have been a peedless hardship on parents and children who were anxious to escape from the city during the summer months either for their regular vacation or impelled by On December 22, 1913.
